Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of older adults. The study was conducted in a community-based setting and involved 40 participants aged 65 and older. The participants were divided into two groups: a control group and an intervention group. The intervention group participated in a supervised walking program for 12 weeks. The control group did not participate in any program. The study measured physical health (walking speed, distance, and time) and psychological health (depression, anxiety, and quality of life) at baseline and at 12 weeks. The results showed that the intervention group had significantly improved physical and psychological health compared to the control group at 12 weeks. The study suggests that a supervised walking program can be an effective intervention for improving the physical and psychological health of older adults.
